Quiz: Module 2, Lesson 2.3 - Your First Conversation

Questions

Question 1

What is the best way to give instructions to an AI agent?

A) Use vague language to test the AI's intelligence B) Be specific and provide context, format preferences, and clear output requirements C) Use as few words as possible D) Always write in technical jargon

Question 2

What should you do during your first few sessions with your AI agent?

A) Expect perfect performance immediately B) Share your context, preferences, and establish working patterns C) Test the AI with trick questions D) Only ask simple factual questions

Question 3

What is a good way to test your agent's memory functionality?

A) Ask it to perform complex calculations B) Tell it something to remember, then ask about it in a new session C) Check the configuration files D) Restart the application multiple times

Question 4

How should you handle it when your agent doesn't perform as expected?

A) Immediately delete and reinstall OpenClaw B) Provide specific feedback and iterate on the output C) Stop using that feature D) Switch to a different AI model

Question 5

What pattern should you establish in your first week with your AI agent?

A) Use it only for emergency tasks B) Build routines like morning check-ins and end-of-day summaries C) Test it with random unrelated questions D) Keep all interactions brief and transactional

---

Answers

Question 1: B Being specific with context, format preferences, and clear requirements leads to better outputs. Vague prompts get vague responses.

Question 2: B The first few sessions should focus on sharing your context, establishing preferences, and building working patterns. This foundation improves all future interactions.

Question 3: B Telling your agent to remember something and then asking about it in a new session tests whether the memory system is working correctly.

Question 4: B When your agent doesn't perform as expected, provide specific feedback about what was wrong and what you wanted, then iterate. This improves future responses.

Question 5: B Establishing routines like morning check-ins and end-of-day summaries creates consistent patterns that help your agent work better with you over time.